

Photocopy these pages duplex to duplex so that when folded the pages are in the right order. On our photocopier at school I found that sometimes every other page has to be fed upside down, I know it has something to do with the orientation, I hope you don't struggle to get it right.

This first set (pages 1-9) includes way more teacher generated writing than I gave to my students. Scroll down to find another version that allows for more original student writing.

We used a visual dictionary to find the food words, I had one for healthy food and one for junk food. Next time around I would print them off back to back to make it easy for students to consult both.

Elle est devenue un superbe papillon.

La chenille qui fait des trous

Le lendemain, elle mange une belle feuille verte.

Elle n'a plus faim.

Lundi, elle mange

Mais elle a encore faim.

Samedi, elle mange

Mardi, elle mange

Mais elle a encore
faim.

Mercredi, elle mange

Mais elle a encore faim.

Elle se construit une maison~une chrysalide.

Elle se construit une maison~une chrysalide.

Elle se construit une maison~une chrysalide.

Cette nuit-là, elle a mal au ventre!

Vendredi, elle mange

Mais elle a encore faim.

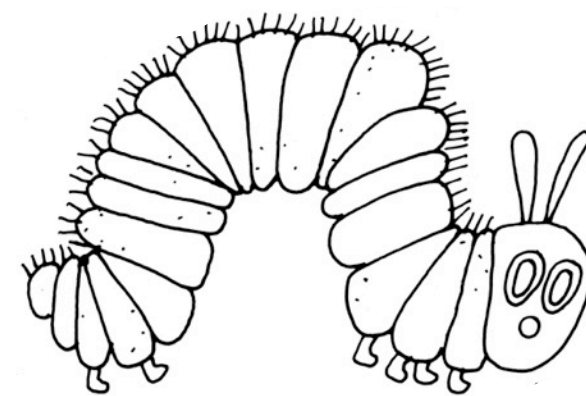

Jeudi, elle mange

Mais elle a encore faim.

The following pages are the ones I used with my students. We began writing on Monday and completed a page each day, the following week we worked on the page about Saturday to the end.

On Saturday in Eric Carle's book the caterpillar eats 11 different things and there are 11 holes to illustrate. We did a mini math lesson and talked about what makes 11. Then we gave the students the option, they could list 11 different things or, they had to use at least 3 different food items but they could say he ate for example 3 suckers, 5 candies, and 3 cupcakes. We had to make the task manageable after all!

La chenille qui fait des trous

Le lendemain, elle mange une

Lundi,

Samedi, Mardi,

Mercredi

Elle se construit une maison

Elle se construit une maison

Elle se construit une maison

Cette nuit-là,

Vendredi,

Jeudi,